Join the Check Up On Them Challenge

By Kirk Driskell
While Covid-19 has changed our day-to-day activities, what are you doing to still stay connected? There are many that have not been able to adapt to the change as fast as others. We are all familiar with the most common CDC recommendations on limiting contact, but what about calling your friends? Dr. Lim, a psychologist says, "Loneliness is about feeling disconnected, even when you have people around you." I have seen many clubs adapt quickly, but that does not mean that all of their members have. Now more than ever it is important to reach out and check on your family, friends and club members. If you have not seen them online or in person lately, give them a call. We never know how much a simple phone call can impact someone.

Let's Get Social

By Jaclyn Donovan

Did you know that DG Kirk Driskell wants to pay for your club to have a party? It's true! In an effort to promote fellowship and membership growth, District 6900 will provide up to $250 to clubs for the express purpose of hosting a club membership social to attract new potential members and introduce them to the fun of Rotary.

This is a Matching grant, meaning that club expenses must total $500 or more to be eligible for the full $250, while any amount less than $500 will be divided evenly between club and District. So invite your family, friends, and prospective Rotarians - have fun!! Funds are limited, though, so this is a "First Come, First Serve" deal. Presidents and Membership Chairs have already received the appropriate documents via email, but anyone with any questions is welcome to contact District Membership Chair Jaclyn Donovan.

"When COVID-19 hit, the group moved to online meetings without skipping a beat. The group is now averaging 35 to 40 attendees per online meeting." ## Rotary Club of Atlanta Metro, Georgia

Chartered: 2019
Original membership: 20
Membership: 31

CLUB INNOVATION:

The club is designed to offer a seamless transition for young professionals who want to advance their careers and their Rotary lives. Focused on networking and mentorship, the club partners with other philanthropic organizations for volunteering opportunities, easing some of the organizational responsibilities of club members.

SPANNING THE AGES:

Atlanta-area Rotarians have a long-standing focus on youth. Their robust RYLA infrastructure with a state-wide student leadership program for interns and a national service program efforts. Looking to the future, the National Step-Up Initiative gave rise to the nascent Rotary Club of Atlanta Metro.

Despite playing an active role as a past president of the Rotaract Club of Atlanta, Alisha Rodriguez assumed that her demanding job would preclude joining a Rotary club. Rodriguez had heard that a lot of Rotary clubs required a large time commitment and that new members often "would get thrown into committees and get overworked," she says.

To David Gordon and Warren Turner, then members of the Rotary Club of Dunwoody with long involvement in guiding the Rotaractors, Rodriguez's apprehensions were familiar. So Gordon and Turner took action, enlisting Rodriguez and others to charter the new club. "Some of them came from Rotaract and some were friends of Rotaractors," says Turner. "We circled back with Rotarians from our club who had left. They found this type of model more accommodating and appealing."

To make the service and club commitments manageable, the club emphasizes volunteer partnerships. "We have structured volunteer opportunities by building relationships with other organizations," rather than inaugurating projects from scratch, says Rodriguez.

"The only charity we encourage members to support financially is The Rotary Foundation," says Gordon. "We support other charities with manpower, intellectual as well as physical." The club works with some of those charities in conjunction with the Rotaract club and other Rotary clubs.

An informal mentoring system is in its infancy, but Gordon already has seen strong bonds forged. "We've just started it, pairing people slowly but surely," he says. The older members also learn from the younger members, Turner says. "The younger people are much more comfortable with emerging technologies. They probably prefer email. They prefer Slack." Rodriguez notes the balance between the young members and the older members. "As a smaller club, it has advantages and disadvantages that sometimes develop within larger clubs," Turner notes. "A trap that a lot of Rotary clubs come across is you tend to bond with the same group of people," he says. "Here, because we're a smaller club, you're forced to talk to everybody. It's about having a conversation, listening to what's important to people."

The club meets twice a month but has sometimes replaced a regular meeting with a fellowship session at different locations, such as an upscale pub with bowling. The club has often held social events at a hotel that, despite its location in Atlanta's trendy Buckhead area, charged the club only $100 for its event space. And a joint meeting with the Atlanta Rotaract club is held every two months.

"It's a less formal club and people really enjoy it. It's a group of friends and we try to keep it that way," says Gordon. "We're spending a lot of time making sure that our members are happy and that they want to join in."

Thomasville Supports Teen Pregnancy Prevention Program

By Susan Backofen

Five years ago, when Scott Rich was the president of the Rotary Club of Thomasville, Rotarian Andre' Marria approached Rich and the board of directors to ask for their local financial support of a Morehouse College School of Medicine Teenage Pregnancy Prevention Initiative (TPPI). TPPI is a federally funded initiative designed to reduce teen pregnancy rates and to serve approximately 3,450 middle and high school youth over a five-year period in six Georgia Counties.

With the approval of the board, the club committed $3,000 in local funding for the TPPI project. In the next four years, succeeding club presidents and their boards recognized the extreme importance of the project and continued the yearly financial support of the initiative. During the five years of the project, the club has given a total of $15,500. in local support of the TPPI which concluded June 30, 2020. Under the direction of the local Rotary Youth Services committee the Thomasville Rotary Club secured an additional $3500 in local funding through a Rotary District Grant. Total local funding provided TPPI during the life of the grant has been $19,000.
